

Why Downsize?

Because Clutter Costs You Money! Whether you're a homeowner, a business owner or both – clutter costs you dollars not to mention psychological and physiological damage. For now, how does clutter cost you money?

Consider this. Let's say you have a "dumping ground" or "accumulation zone" in your home for the stuff which either has no place or there's no time to put it where it belongs. As this area grows, you might have to spend money on replacing stuff you can't find. Also, if you want to create room in your home by storing stuff in a shed or a storage facility, that will cost dollars. If the family "dumping ground" is the garage, does that force the car outside unprotected against the elements and vandalism, devaluing the car and increasing insurance rates? Here's another garage question –what's on the bottom of that big pile? If you don't know, maybe you don't really need it after all -- if you're not using it and not missing it.

Businesses can reduce operating costs by using space wisely. This means not devoting a percentage of the lease payment to house junk, clutter or files of unknown value. A business would not want to lose a valuable client by being unable to locate a crucial file in a timely matter or a set of detailed client notes. If a piece of equipment, manual or a part is lost somewhere in the office, it will cost money to replace.

Simple & Clear designs solutions for people who want to organize their businesses and their lives. We do this by using their passions, past and vision for the future to achieve extraordinary results.

We always welcome your comments, questions and – most importantly -- your tips. Feel free to contact us anytime at jeff@simpleclear.biz.